INTRODUCTION.

It is now fully ten years since I compiled, from Bishop Steere's "Collections for a Handbook of the Yao Language," the "Yao-English Vocabulary" of which the present issue is an enlargement. The former Compilation was made in the most mechanical manner, at a time when I had no acquaintance whatever with the Yao tongue, and while I was still living in Zanzibar. It is scarcely a matter for surprise, therefore, that it contained many downright errors, in addition to its various other defects, and its general incompleteness. For the present edition of this vocabulary I have many apologies to offer. At one time, indeed, I had formed a more ambitious scheme, and had hoped to have been able, ere this, to issue a tolerably complete Yao-English lexicon; but as years went on, my early enthusiasm for linguistic studies began to flag, and press of other work, and varied occupations and distractions, combined to cause me to banish all thoughts of a dictionary. Add to this, my long sojourn at Masasi did not bring me in contact with the main body of the Yao people, nor can I be said ever to have had an opportunity of picking up the language anywhere near its true source, I, however, continued to note down from time to time, though in a sadly desultory manner, the words in the language which were new to me and to the old vocabulary; and in this way, by the time I left

Newala last year to come and reside in Lukoma, where Yao is never spoken, I had added to the original collection some 300 new words. In August last year I had the great pleasure of meeting the Rev. Alexander Hetherwick of the Mission of the Established Church of Scotland at Blantyre. In him I found a Yao scholar not less enthusiastic than industrious, and I had the great advantage of much conversation and comparing of notes with him on the subject of the intricacies and puzzles of Yao grammar. It was interesting to both of us to find that we had independently arrived at the same conclusions with regard to several of the problems presented, while, with regard to others I believe we were able each to throw light on the other's researches. I found, that having already made some excellent translation of Bible stories and smaller portions of the Scriptures, Mr. Hetherwick was, at the time of my visit, engaged upon a Yao version of St. Mark. In addition to these labours, he had found time to amass a very large number of new Yao words, and to make many notes for a complete handbook to the language. He told me that, if spared to return home a few years hence, he hopes to see both the grammar, and the Vocabulary (which no doubt will deserve the title of lexicon) through the press. I can say with confidence that, if these are published, our Mission will derive the greatest benefit from them, and will owe their author no small measure of thanks. Meanwhile, however, it may be some years before they are duly printed and published, and for this reason I am emboldened to put forth another edition of the old Yao-English vocabulary. Mr. Hetherwick has very kindly permitted me to incorporate all his new-found words, and these amount to certainly not less than 1,500, many of which are identical with some of those on my own shorter list. Perhaps the present edition of the Vocabulary contains double as many words as the former one, and this fact will be allowed, I think, to constitute a sufficient reason for its issue. Comparing it with the tolerably full vocabulary of Bondei which Mr. Woodward has published, I find the number of words in the Yao list to exceed those of the Bondei by at least 1,000. In the new edition, many of the errors in the old one have been avoided or corrected, and several more than doubtful words, which had crept into the Vocabulary by mistake, have been omitted, but I cannot claim to have thoroughly revised Bishop Steere's works, though aware of its urgent need of revision. Neither have I attempted any classification of the various meanings of the words. All I have done, is to mark by numbers (1, 2, 3 &c.) meanings which appear to be perfectly distinct, and to have no connexion with one another. Where the meanings have been either synonymous or evidently derivative the one from the other, I have usually, though not always, written them together without numbers. I send the little book out as a simple vocabulary, because of Mr. Hetherwick's forthcoming dictionary which must necessarily take its place. My own Yao studies, such as they have been, at all times desultory, superficial, and slovenly, are probably now set aside for ever. At Lukoua the language is never spoken, and on the shores of the lake throughout its upper part, with the exception of Chingomanje's town, hardly at all. Until some new station is founded in Yao-land, our friends at Blantyre, and our own workers at Masasi and Newala, will be our only authorities on the language. Before quitting the subject however, I should like to add a few words on some points connected with it, that struck me after studying the Yao translations published at Blantyre. I am astonished beyond measure to find the exceedingly small amount of variation that exists between the Yao as spoken at Blantyre and that of Masasi 300 miles distant, I refuse altogether to recognize different dialects of Yao after seeing those translations, except indeed in such a sense as, in England, we speak of the dialects of Hants and Cambridgeshire. I believe the Yao language to be practically the same wherever it is spoken, and the cause of this to be found in the fact that the Yaos are never stay-at-homes, but that since they are always travelling about from place to place, their language has no chance of differing much in different places. Words do not remain peculiar to one village because of the constant communication that is kept up between all of them. Thus, if a new word ever does arise in one village, it is soon spread about everywhere; or if, on the other hand, an old one should begin to fall into comparative disuse, it is not allowed to be forgotten altogether, by reason of the numerous caravans visiting the villages, when the word is sure at one time or another to crop up again, and so rarely dies out entirely in any part of Yao land, except, indeed, in the general decay of the language which, however slowly, is nevertheless surely going on. I can safely aver that Mr. Hetherwick's translation of St. Mark can be read in our Churches at Newala and Masasi, so as to be perfectly well understood by the Yaos there assembled. Mr. Hetherwick, indeed, told me that any translation of St Matthew would not be understood at Blantyre. He was, however, too polite to add the reason which is certainly not far to seek. The translation was made before I had been at Masasi 14 months, or had had time to gain any real knowledge of the language. Hence, in addition to the large amount of clerical errors which a careless correction of proof sheets did not remove, there is an untold number of mistakes, grammatical and verbal, which are sufficient to make it unfit for reading, except by one who knows how to alter and correct as he reads. Again, another of its defects is to be found in the fact that my assistant in the work, a mere boy, was able to furnish me so seldom with special words, that, over and over again, I had to fall back upon Swahili for words which a better knowledge of Yao would have supplied. I take this opportunity of pointing out the reasons of the worthlessness of the translation, in order to warn others against following the example of my presumption. Mr. Hetherwick has never once, or only once, fallen back on Swahili: indeed, I believe he has little or no acquaintance with that tongue. It is also remarkable as affording a grand testimony to the fulness of the Yao language, that only a very few of the words he uses can be traced to Portuguese for their origin. Let any one take up Bishop Steere's translation of St Mark, and count up the Swahili words there, which are Arabic in origin, and then let one who knows Yao count up the foreign words in the Yao version of the same gospel. He will no longer remain in any doubt as to which language must receive the palm for being purely African throughout and able to stand on its own original basis. Thus in the first page of St Mark's gospel, as it stands in our Swahili version, there are at least 16 words, some of which are used several times over, which are of direct Semitic origin. In the same number of verses in the Yao St. Mark, there is not a single word which can be traced to any foreign source, and I think I should be within the mark, were I to add, that, in the whole gospel, not more than half a dozen words are from the Portuguese. I do not wish to appear to be putting any slight on the Swahili language as it now stands. I am ready to admit that, in one and all of its grammatical relations, it is and always has been, a pure and unmixed African tongue. Its grammar is full and comprehensive, and owes no thanks for this to Arabic or to any other foreign idiom. In itself, however, it is remarkably poor as to its vocabulary, having had to borrow largely, how largely, let the translation of words so simple as many of those used in the Gospels witness, from Arabic. This was necessary, hence the language has become, in consequence of this enrichment from an external source, an admirable vehicle for cultivated thought, and a thoroughly useful one for imparting education. Nevertheless, in justice to the language whose praises I desire always to sing, it must be said that, foreign enrichment apart, Yao is infinitely fuller and more copious than, and therefore infinitely superior to, Swahili. Only one entirely ignorant of the facts can dispute this. It will appear in the eagerly looked-for biography of Bishop Steere, how thoroughly he appreciated the wide reach of the Yao language, its ability to stand alone, and its excellence as a medium for Biblical translations. It cannot be doubted, I think, that, in this latter respect, it far excels any of the neighbouring tongues. If I may be allowed to point out that which, among the many merits of the Yao version of St Mark, appears, to me the greatest, I should say that it lies in the thorough manner in which the translation keeps to the Yao idiom. The version is always accurate and perfectly literal, and yet all the peculiarities and the delightful terseness of Yao idiom have been held and preserved in it throughout. To my mind this is a genuine triumph of translation, and I cannot refrain here from expressing my admiration for this splendid achievement. It is, I will go so far as to say, the gospel as a born Yao would have written it. Having spoken of Mr. Hetherwick's work, I ought not to omit to mention that of another industrious Yao Scholar, Mr. Buchanan of Zomba, whose translation of St. Luke, though certainly inferior to the St. Mark, is still an excellent specimen of what good work in this line may be done by one who has had no special training in linguistics. I may be forgiven here for expressing my opinion, that a small proportion of the words made use of in both these versions do really belong to the Nyassa tongue. This is not the place to discuss any of the interesting problems of comparative philology upon which a study of Yao and neighbouring language are calculated to throw so much light; but I may mention that some of us are convinced, that a careful comparison of a few of these languages would lead to a knowledge of the origin of most, if not all, of the so-called pronominal and tense prefixes whose etymology and derivation have hitherto defied explanation. They are indeed, as Dr. Bleek long ago pointed out, the last lingering syllables of words formerly complete in themselves but worn down in the long process of phonetic decay, and whose meaning is still retained more or less in the tenses of verbs, and in the substantive to which they are now prefixed. Ka--, li, lu. sa, &c, &c, all yield up their secrets readily to the 'comparative' method of linguistic study. To anyone wishing to know how a genuine African thinks, or to speak more plainly, in what order he arranges his thoughts, I would say, study the Yao language. Study it, not in books, whether they be translations, grammars or vocabularies. Use these only for reference, but study the language by keeping ears open, and minds free from theories as to how the people might be expected to express their thoughts. Let any one keep to these simple rules, and he cannot fail to make a good Yao scholar, and, if he has a good ear, will end by speaking like one of the people themselves.

I have had but one motive in penning so long an introduction to so trivial and meagre a work. I have descanted on the merits of the Yao tongue, because I am anxious to stimulate others to take an interest in it, and to stir up the enthusiasm of fresh workers in a field I am deserting. If anything should prevent the issue of Mr. Hetherwick's dictionary within the next few years, I hope some one of our staff, whose labours lie among the Yaos, may find time to add the English-

Yao part of this Vocabulary, and make other improvements in my imperfect work. As I have already said, I send it forth with many apologies, and a full consciousness of its many defects; yet in spite of these, I am not without hope tha it will fill up a gap, and prove useful to all whose travels or labours bring them into connexion with the Yao race.
